A law degree equips graduates for an extensive array of careers and provides a balanced and varied foundation for whatever career path is pursued. Law graduates are provided with the opportunity to consider and analyze topical and controversial issues and are taught how to think critically, how to analyze and persuade by logical argument. Students develop sophisticated research, analysis, reasoning and writing skills that are highly prized in many professions. Every firm, organization, industry and corporation needs people who know the law as it applies to them. People with adequate knowledge of law can be involved in any area of life they are interested in.
